PREFACE.

THE groundwork of the following volume is a collection of English and Malay Phrases published, in the end of last year, by Mr North of the American Mission, Singapore. On receiving a Copy of that Collection, it occurred to the Editor that its usefulness would be considerably increased by the addition of the Chinese vernacular in one or more of the Dialects spoken in the Straits. He had accordingly translated a considerable part of it into the vernacular Canton, when he was induced and enabled by the assistance of the Rev. Mr. Brown, of the Morrison Education Society, to extend the plan, so as to embrace at once a version into good Chinese, with the corresponding vernacular in two dialects in Roman Character.

The Editor trusts that the Chinese will be found at once faithful to the original, and sufficiently idiomatic. It is the work of a Chinaman of considerable acquirements both in his own language and in English. The harshness, which may be discovered in some of the phrases, is principally to be attributed to their insulation. The Editor was struck with this, while the sheets were going through the press. He and some other foreign students objected to some expressions, as being only English in a Chinese dress; and more than one Seen-Shang objected to others, as not being flowing. They were accordingly changed; but most of the original expressions have since been met with, in the progress of the Editor's Chinese Reading. Foreign students are in danger, indeed, of rejecting many expressions, which are really Chinese, from their corresponding with idioms of their own language, with which they are already familiar. There is to be sure a greater danger on the other hand of their falling into an unidiomatic style; but he must be a bold man, who will pronounce against an expression, emanating from a native Chinese, because it seems to savour of another language.

The Canton vernacular is the production of the same individual, and was taken down from his dictation by the Rev. Mr Brown, according to the orthography adopted in Mr. Bridgman's Chrestomathy. There may be a difference in the initial sounds of some of the words, as the Chinaman referred to is not from Canton city, but from a village, about fifty le in the interior. This however is not of very great importance, as these differences seem to interpose no obstruction to his fluent intercourse with natives of Canton.

In preparing the Hok-keen vernacular, considerable assistance was derived from the Rev. Mr. Abeel, of the American Board for foreign Missions, and from his teacher, a Chinaman of the rank of Sew-Tsae.

It was attempted at first to conform it to the same orthography, as the Canton; but the endeavour was soon abandoned, from its requiring the introduction of several new vowel and diphthong sounds into a system, already surely sufficiently complicated. The orthography adopted will be found to correspond nearly with that employed in Mr. Dyer's Vocabulary of the Hok-keen Dialect.

The Editor, however, is of opinion that it would have been an improvement had he adhered to the diphthong-sounds employed by Mr. Medhurst, and also to his orthography of ch'h and ch for the sounds denoted respectively in this volume by ch and tsh, and in Mr. Dyer's Vocabulary by c'h and tsh.

The distinction between these sounds is deserving particular attention, and ought to be carefully caught up by a foreign student from the lips of the natives.

It is not deemed necessary to subjoin a table of this orthography, because it harmonizes with the powers belonging to the vowels and consonants in English.

The Editor has in conclusion to request the indulgence of scholars, better acquainted with the Chinese language than himself, to the many errors which they will discover in the work. He particularly regrets the wrong orthography of Chid-ây instead of Tshid-ây, which extends through nearly a third part of the volume, also of tshăyh for chĕyh, and bŏžyh for bŏĕyh.

He trusts notwithstanding these things that the book will be found serviceable in Schools, for which it is principally got up, and to those who are beginning to lisp their ideas in Chinese.

TABLE OF VOWEL AND DIPTHTHONG SOUNDS

EMPLOYED IN THE MALAY.

a as in father, gaduh. a with the mark ∪ over it shows that the accent is not on that syllable.

e as in they, merah, meja. As in den, when in a syllable ending with a consonant, as pendek.

i as in machine, tipu, hilang. As in pin, when in a syllable ending with a consonant. as pintu.

E as in pen, and i as in pin, are always follwed by two consonants, except in the last syllable.

o as in pole, kotor, tong.

u as in full, tukang, tutup.

ŭ as in but, nŭgri, kŭrja. It occurs only in accented syllable, prefixes excepted.

ei as in height, sampei, heiran.

á as in what, kwat. This sound seldom occurs.

Words of three syllables, when not marked, are accented on the second syllable. Thus: Sŭlasei is accented on the first, panchahá on the third.
